Claudie Laks

Claudie Laks began by studying literature and linguistics before pursuing artistic studies at the National School of Fine Arts in Paris, as well as at the university. A student of Georges Jeanclos, she developed a primarily sculptural practice for several years, oriented towards a Bachelardian exploration of clay.

The return to canvas, brush, and color is claimed as a necessary condition for producing fundamentally painterly, frontal paintings, where the retinal principle is embraced. Printmaking also holds an important place in her exploration, where graphic gesture competes with the plane of color. Her works evoke the slow, suspended time, contrasted with the energy of renewal, warmth, and a wakening. They explore the temporality of traces, and calligraphic textures, where past, present, and future coexist in a condensed temporality.

Claudie Laks' work is a celebration of time and energy, intertwined. Her brushstrokes channel an elemental vitality, where the energy is rhythmic and spontaneous. Concurrently, collage has always had a privileged place in Laks' journey. Seemingly on the fringes of her painterly activity, collage nonetheless serves as the link between her various artistic practices, being both pictorial, spatial, and fundamentally playful.
